

Opening statement about me being 10/10 hard-working and motivated. I am currently in my final year of my undergraduate studies at Durham University, studying Education Studies (English Studies). For my dissertation, I am researching an area of great interest to myself and which I want to research in greater depth at PhD level: the experiences of estranged students in UK higher education. In particular, I am interested in the ways that estranged students construct their narratives of estrangement, and how these narratives impact their experiences. My own position as an estranged student has greatly influenced this motivation to help other students in my situation to benefit from a higher education in the same way as students with family support, but has also provided me with the unique opportunity of working with charities such as Stand Alone to promote awareness of and support for estranged students in HE. Throughout my degree, I have been heavily involved in a range of extra-curricular activities and part-time work, providing me with the time-management skills necessary to undertake PhD study.
